Portability as a strategy

Why thinking about exit matters from day one.

Most people think about leaving when they have to.

By then, it's often too late to leave well.

> Portability isn't about leaving. It's about having the option.

A portable business means:

- Your member data can be exported
- Your content is in formats you can move
- Your integrations aren't dependent on one vendor
- Your revenue history is yours to keep

Why this matters even if you never leave:

- Better negotiating position
- Less anxiety about platform changes
- More confidence in your decisions
- Freedom to evolve

The opposite of portable:

- Data you can't export
- Content trapped in proprietary formats
- Integrations that only work one way
- No backup plan

This isn't convenience. It's lock-in.

Build like you might leave someday.

Not because you want to. Because having the option changes everything.
